

You've got two eyes to look with.
But there are children who can't see really well.
They blink all the time or may even have headaches.
That can be a problem, but it doesn't have to be.
You can have the optometrist check your eyes.
Your eyes (or one of them) may need help.
The optometrist examines them thoroughly and then tells you what to do.

The optometrist is a doctor.
She wears ordinary clothes,
and sometimes a white doctor's coat.
She has a lot of instruments with which she can examine and check your eyes.
(Take a look at the special little flashlight she uses.)
Does every eye function properly?
Do you squint sometimes?
Can you see everything clearly?
