

UNDER MY FATHER'S PILLOW

UNDER MY FATHER'S PILLOW

UNDER MY FATHER'S PILLOW

Elle Werners

www.oorlogsverhalen.com/ W -WERNERS JAN-THEO

Photos and documents from the family archive

Some photos from the Microsoft 365 creative content library

Publisher BOOKMUNDO

Layout and cover + unsigned poems: Elle Werners

© P. Brenninkmeijer-Werners

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or made public.

In an article about predicting the future in the Telegraaf, Jan C. van der Heide writes: "Nothing changes just like that on the calendar pages of December 31 or January 1.

In a preview, the defined time does not work."

On page 109 of the booklet De Bevrijding van 's-Hertogenbosch (DE BOSCHBOOM 1969) I read a moving piece written by block head Foppele ('t Zand).

'And then those poor little children, children who had no idea what was happening around them. Instinctively they took cover from their parents, who tried to protect the delicate child's body as much as possible from the merciless missiles and cold with their bodies.

They looked up at their parents with big questioning eyes, as if to see in their eyes how great the danger was. Never before had the childlike trust in the parents made such a big impression on us and for many those moments will undoubtedly have been unforgettable.'

THE SILENCE SCREAMS

DEN BOSCH 1944. As a fanatic amateur filmmaker, my father captured unique images. But he also made notes with pencil in a notepad. I admire the bravery and creativity of my then young parents. My father's birthday was on October 28, so the day after the liberation of DEN BOSCH he celebrated his 39th birthday! My parents married on October 16, 1940. They had two children during the occupation. On 11-11-1944 there was also a third 'liberation child' at: (died in 2008). After the war: my special brother (1947) and last 'Kruimeltje' (1948). In the photos and videos you can see two little girls in military clothing. On the liberator's lap and on a real jeep. (My sister Tony and I). The Canadian Jack Hazelwood was one of our liberators. From Brandon, Manitoba – Canada. In my experience, he was the 'superhero'. I learned English words: 'Jack, chocolate!' I would shout and tap furiously on his breast pocket. In response to this anecdote, I would like to share something: - In 2008 on April 26, the following article was published in the Telegraaf: 'On our appeal last April - placed with an interview with a Spitfire pilot - readers of De Telegraaf responded en masse.' Eyewitnesses of the Second World War. Special eyewitnesses of Dutch people who experienced the war. (With a CD of the last interview with Soldier of Orange.) By Charles Sanders. Publisher House of Knowledge. My contribution to this book: pages 48 and 49.

After some searching and inquiring, I came across the document thanks to my youngest sister. Then I got the copies, which my oldest sister took care of for me. Neatly printed, but almost illegible. I was very curious about the content. She added a note: 'Dad wrote it on two notepads, and later (up to page 20) copied it in a notebook. One part was still attached with a staple, other sheets are loose. I'm going to sort them after copying...' Written in pencil on - partly lined - partly graph paper -. Many texts were crossed out. A few loose leaves made it difficult to determine the order; and almost nowhere dated!

