*To me you are the rising sun
And I am just a tiny star disappearing at dawn
But every night I will return to see you rise again and belighten
the planet with golden rays*

Once upon a time in a small town named Beuningen, located in the kingdom of The Netherlands, a man lived over six years in cruel conditions as sleep was deprived from him by immense cold that came inside his' house through cracks in the wall. He suffered mentally, physically and through losing properties by the outdoor climate that ruled his rooms. The responsible parties didn't take responsibility and rather found it easier to blame it all on the man, saying that he was delirious. The man was already dark by soul and rooted furthermore into the black abyss of hate, untill...

He met the light of his' life in a woman that was hired to be the househelp during the fifth year of staying in that hellhouse, she was a small woman with moonlight coloured long hair, with warm eyes straight out of Arabian desert mirages, with a voice of wonder, from the East she had crossed the seas to settle abroad years ago, always living closeby but never was seen before. Her name was as holy as was her faith in God. While nobody cared about the man who suffered greatly, she cared more about him then the whole world could care together.

At first sight and meeting she was afraid of the man. The man had changed by the years of pain into evil and anger. The woman was open to him, honoust, helpfull, taking the chance to get to know the man better without judging at first impression. In the timespan of several months they became close friends. The woman was able to change the man tot the better by removing the negativity in his' personality. By improving his character and view on life. She shared her care and love with the man, so he could find comfort and support, to transform into the person as who he is today's.

The man was sure that they met with a reason, he believes in omens and signs. He fell deeply in love with the woman, but he knew nothing about love at all. He started writing poetry for the woman to express his feelings. He gave every poem to the woman on scroll or via a digital message.

This poetry album is a collection that contains almost every poem written for that special woman. This book is a thanksgiving and a dedication to her. Remember, there is always something good in life, even when you are surrounded by darkness.

Sometimes, you only need someone to show you and to learn you to find the way towards the lightside.

Sometimes, you will meet an angel.
