1. INTRODUCTION

Since the late 2020s, I have written and published twelve books on assorted topics to share knowledge and experiences, but mostly because I enjoyed it, and it helped bridge the inky corona crisis usefully. Writing is meaningful, keeps the mind sharp and is a top sport. In this volume, I have written (short) stories on a variety of themes, which to the reader may seem unrelated at first glance but may be related to closer inspection.

For 12,800 years, our collective history has shown several common threads. Empires rose and disappeared again silently or with a big bang. Pride often comes before fall. Natural disasters, famines and epidemics like the plague plagued mankind regularly. I have become convinced that 11,800 years ago, a global natural disaster occurred that wiped out already highly developed societies, most of which were located on coasts.

The global sea level rose steadily by 120 meters. That is different from the few centimeters at the end of this century that ecofascists scare you with daily. Do not get me wrong, there are few people who care less about flora and fauna than I do but remain realistic. I will come back to that later. According to some scholars, the disaster 12 millennia came from a huge comet impact, others from a giant meteorite.

But that is not what this booklet is about. It is about various challenges and dilemmas that many people struggle with and in this booklet, it is larded with witty anecdotes. I did the same with my books on history because most people find history dead boring, and few people read those kinds of books anymore. Multidisciplinary history is not boring at all and offers you insights into the past, the present and the future because while history does not repeat itself, it does rhyme, according to Mark Twain.

The stories are based on contrary insights, sometimes controversial knowledge, my own experiences, adventures and escapades. The stories are about impending geopolitical disasters, such as war, deteriorating educational quality, embarrassing political governance, mediocrity in almost all sectors of our society, hubris and arrogance of the so-called collective West, image formation, perception management and cognitive dissonance in many, about non-functioning mainstream media and their blind propaganda, as well as funny incidents and life lessons.

Some stories are short, others longer, depending on the theme and my inspiration. What is that inspiration anyway? It is also about psychology, such as a disturbed male-female relationship, the ever-shrinking of individual freedoms, in short about opportunities and shortcomings that have crept into our society since, say, the late 1990s.

We were trapped in a comfort zone for decades, were not alert enough as a society to sleep in and neglected personal happiness. Much-needed innovations failed to materialize and who in our country still produces tangible products? We have become veritable meeting tigers, pumping around our "hard-earned money".

What is this paper money backed by and is unlimited fiat money printing wise eventually? Is there such a thing as a free lunch? So, what makes a person happy and are we happy when you look at the grumpy heads on the streets and consider the incredibly high number of chronically ill people? Surveys that are supposed to show that we are so happy and (mentally) healthy I distrust because they can be politically motivated.

Mental health is linked to physical health. Journalists in the mainstream media, who are supposed to follow the government objectively, expertly and critically, are in bed with the government and large wealthy advertisers. Reliable investigative journalism de facto no longer exists and that is serious because a democracy can only flourish with critical journalism based on facts and sound analysis and not on deliberately incompetent propaganda broadcasters, who spare the government in everything and see it as their job to cajole and cover that government when it fails.

In addition, these prestitutes now pay more attention to which third-rate celebrity is doing it with whom, how often and with whom even more. Sylvie Meis with her golden pussy, is a good example. It has become tabloid and sewer journalism. Can we still blindly trust judges or has much of it become activist and why do most have a D'66 background?

About my stories in this booklet, I can be brief, whether you love it or not, whether you laugh at it or not, whether it offers you new insights or not. I cherish the adage I agree to disagree with, because a sharp dialogue based on facts and valid arguments from multiple perspectives is much needed to grow and is the salt of the earth. Nothing is more deadly and mind-numbing than always agreeing with each other to keep the peace. That is why I am excited like a jester in a king's court, holding up a mirror to people at a time when satire has all but disappeared.

I was born and bred in Rotterdam, and it is in my DNA to speak straight. You may not make friends with that, but it contributes to your self-respect. If one likes acting, then you should go to drama school. If the reader gets angry about certain statements, then that is fine. Always ask yourself what the root cause is of why you get angry.

Because it cuts the wood and tarnishes your unshakeable human and world view and makes you insecure? Know thyself was the motto of the wise ancient Greek and we have forgotten that too. Today, we live in a kind of Alice in Wonderland, in a fictional reality created by the mainstream media, politicians and opinion makers, in which Orwellian doublespeak is gaining traction.

War is peace, tyranny is democracy, freedom is a straitjacket. Vapid and self-righteous politicians excel in visionless, semantic nitpicking and how they come across in the media. Much of what we are presented with daily is not based on facts, but on wishful thinking and gut feelings. It is a dreamed or rather a prescribed reality that you must believe in, just like cultists blindly follow their guru.

This could have serious negative consequences and even lead to the end of Western civilization that we owe to the Greeks and Romans. We are living in an extremely dangerous geopolitical period due to several escalating sources of conflict, which if we dig a little deeper, we have caused ourselves, such as the proxy war in Ukraine. I know that country is like the back of my hand and lived there for years and was there in February 2014 when the US staged a coup in Kiev.

They went steps with the boys from the CIA (but at the time I did not suspect what they were up to). Some years back, I wrote the integral history of Russia and Ukraine, Europe's two largest countries. More than 90% of what the mainstream media, politicians, NATO-affiliated so-called experts and think tanks claim is blatant nonsense and deliberately lied to build popular support in order to continue supporting that country with obscene amounts of money and arming it to the teeth, and they have been doing so for more than eight years even before this proxy war started.

This support leads to the destruction of that country and is that paradoxical or not. Do we call that helping and do our politicians really care about the countless Ukrainian dead, maimed and traumatized for life? I do not understand why politicians like von der Leyen are not awake to what they have done to these victims and their loved ones. President Putin is demonized and is the devil or an incarnated Hitler, but is that true?

You might as well call him, the leader of the largest and most diverse country in the world, based on objective facts and plausible arguments, the best head of government since Bismarck. After a total collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, he resurrected Russia like a sphinx and that country is fully back on the map as a world power, and Russia has become an extraordinarily innovative, beautiful country with dazzling fashionable cities and more freedom than at home in the West.

If you do not believe me, check out the thirty most beautiful cities there on YouTube or go there when the dust of this insane proxy war has settled. Our mostly state-sponsored or big-party advertiser-funded mainstream media is two drops of water like the Pravda in the darkest days of the USSR. The self-professed leftists could have been followers of one Davidovich Bronstein alias Lev Trotsky, as most know him by name.

We have become a bit confused and have repeatedly taken the wrong turn since the turn of the century. The most dangerous people are those who have a small grasp, little knowledge, and needed core skills and life experience, but have sky-high unachievable ambitions, are very driven and think themselves wonderfully smart. They are more dangerous than smart lazy or stupid lazy people because they do little damage.

Fanatics like these are destroying our country and creating ideal conditions for all-out wars. They believe they have the best interests of the world or their country at heart and that makes it more dangerous. I am convinced that Hitler had the same and you should not shoot straight into emotion in your judgements, because nobody is 100% bad or good.

Hitler did plenty of good things for Germany in the early years - from building Autobahns to child benefits to solving the sky-high unemployment caused by the Americans - and was seen as a messianic savior by many outside Germany - and especially in Britain, the US, France, Italy and Spain. That simple black-and-white thinking of present-day politicians and mainstream media, while easier to digest, does not contribute to understanding the root causes of complex crises.

Yes, Hitler later revealed himself as the anti-Christ, but comparing Putin to this is a gross disgrace. If we had had a little more respect for his achievements and taken Russia's legitimate interests seriously, this terrible war would have been avoided and what the European economy did not collapse, as it is now, if only because of the spotty natural gas, which a modern industrialized country cannot do without.

The Americans are laughing in their fists as they sell to Europe their four times more expensive liquid gas. One might expect our government leaders in Europe to look after the interests of their citizens and businesses to the maximum, but nothing could be further from the truth. They manifest themselves as true globalists and, like loyal vassals, lick the boots of the US, a country in serious decline and de facto financial bankruptcy.

A certain polarization in our political scene is a blessing precisely because it can be the engine of a meaningful social discourse. Eventually, this excessive poldering is a dead end. We must cut the Gordian knot. Alexander the Great did the same in Gordium, a city in what was then Phrygia, in present-day Turkey. I am disgusted by hedgehog behavior and uncritical sheep who will do anything, including self-censorship, to remain part of the group, even if the group is heading straight for the abyss.

Be yourself, alert, critical and authentic and become who you already are, and philosopher Nietzsche said so. Ask yourself the following question, how did you manifest yourself during the corona crisis and how do you feel about it now? Are there things you regret in retrospect and why did you allow yourself to be so easily misled? The same goes for your stance in the proxy war in Ukraine. Why did you allow yourself to be fooled again?

Do you really have a flat learning curve and will never learn? Why do you have such blind faith in government officials, politicians, so-called independent experts, think tanks and the MSM? Were you guided by your emotions, which the media and politicians played on or was your compass logical? Follow and develop your innate talent and your (moral) compass and finally keep thinking and being fair.

Do not do to another what you would not want done to you and put yourself in the other person's shoes, your (imaginary or otherwise) opponent, such as Russians and Putin, for example, to understand things better. Might they also be entitled to a new security arrangement they insisted on in late 2021? It may be a disappointment to many, but this biggest country in the world is puissant rich and they are not at all interested in us and other European countries, let alone wanting to conquer them.

That country has the most valuable collection of precious metals, including huge reserves of gold, vast amounts of fossil fuels, rare resources in the world and possesses substantial diamond reserves. Because these kinds of reserves are the critical success factors in a transforming global economy soon, where BRICS will increasingly set the tone of the music, these kinds of wealthy countries have the future.

Over the past 30 years, NATO has, against all agreements made, erected a new iron around Russia and it is not they who are at our borders, but we at theirs. THE NATO, besides, is not a peace-loving defensive organization at all, just look at the violence against Serbia, Libya, Syria and other countries, and this US-led organization now wants to expand into Asia even though, in my opinion, it is very far away from the North Atlantic.

The US and EU attitude from 2008 onwards like we have nothing to do with your security interests Russia, is not only completely unreasonable but also unsustainable. The US arrogantly rejected the offer on a comprehensive security arrangement by the end of 2022, and for this we are now literally paying the high price of a totally lost war and a moribund economy. Our citizens notice this daily in their pockets due to ridiculously unreasonable prices of necessities.

Were Russia or China to do the same in Venezuela or Mexico as NATO has done towards Russia since 1997, the US would immediately declare war on such countries based on the so-called Monroe doctrine. Can anyone tell me the difference if we were consistent, consistent and just? According to Britain's George Orwell, all pigs are equal, but some pigs are more equal than others.

Demonizing leaders like Putin, Xi, Gaddafi, Assad, Hussein, Kim il Un, Kamenei and others is a cheap trick to mobilize one's own population around fear but is often just a caricature of reality. It merely encourages arms sales by the five biggest arms manufacturers in the US (Boeing, Lockheed Martin, Raetheon, General Dynamics and Northrop Gumman).

Am I a conspiracy thinker if I think that some politicians in the EU are (un)consciously letting themselves be used by those companies? The term conspiracy thinker is a brilliant invention of one James Jesus Angleton, a CIA strategist, to stifle all criticism of the government and the official and false narrative about the assassination of J.F. Kennedy, his brother and Marten Luther King.

If you look at the term anti-Semitism, its use in practice has the same effect, about which later. Sit back, fasten your seatbelts because now we are entering the rollercoaster ☹

2. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER

My eldest sister Ada was a lookalike of Elisabeth Taylor, a knockout Brunette, with a strong, smart, but not too pretty personality. There is no doubt that all young, as well as older, men were at her feet, but she chose a gnome in which compared to the bellringer of Notre Dame, was a hunk. Besides Sunday school teacher, in daily life he was a car salesman, a representative of Peugeot, but in retrospect that also turned out to be just a cover or side job.

My uncle Jan, who had emigrated to Germany as a guest worker in the late 1960s after a fighting divorce, was once again visiting us in Rotterdam-Zuid. A salient detail is that he had married my mother's sister. Through my parents, he and his new wife Ali maintained the only sentiments they still had for our country during such sleepovers, and once a year they came to indulge in this need.

Stories about the German occupation were then repeatedly brought up and my uncle Jan would proudly tell the same story every time, how he stole potatoes from the Germans from a truck during the hunger winter and had outsmarted them. My grandfather died of starvation during that hunger winter and that is one of the worst forms of dying.

Uncle Jan and my father certainly counted themselves among the resistance as my father evaded Arbeitseinsatz and his mother said to an Obersturmführer who knocked on the door. My grandmother held a hand and said that my father was insane, and the Germans did not like that, and this non-fanatical Nazi drooped, but it is certain that my grandmother would have killed this German had he acted differently.

In doing so, my grandmother forgot that if she had done so, the whole street would have been killed, because the Nazis adhered to the principal tooth for whole teeth. In our family, we harbored a deep dislike and hatred for Nazis and Germans, also because they had bombed the center of Rotterdam, and many generations of our ancestors were born and raised in Rotterdam.

It was striking - and I only realized this much later - that the deportation and persecution of Jews was rarely, if ever, mentioned. I only learned about that tragedy in high school. My father regularly challenged Uncle Jan because, according to Jan, everything was etwas besser und größer in Germany. According to that uncle, German shepherds in Germany were bigger and everything was better regulated, ranging from healthcare to car inspections, and that was true.

Uncle Jan was happy in Germany, but my father defaulted to irritating that after some time and then made fun of him for being a rotten nazi, usually just before Jan and Ali went back home. Some time before that, Uncle Jan routinely baked some kind of oil balls, which he called sputnik and which you could have played tennis with as well.

This uncle once gave me a tracksuit, which I used to go skating in, and that oversized suit was so flexible that my friends called me Yogi Bear while skating. I did not like skating at all, I loved summer, and skating gave me cold hands and cramps in my legs. I also did not like watching skating on TV and with regularity, three Dutchmen became number 1, 2 and 3 every year, at least that is how it felt to me, and it looked like a kind of self-praise.

No gave me football with footballers gifted by our dear lord like Johan Cruyff, Willem van Hanegem and Robbie Rensenbrink. Also popular were Mohammed Ali's fights, for which my father and I got up in the middle of the night. We lived in lush green Zuidwijk in Rotterdam, at Stoutenburg 7c, and for 19 years I had the best imaginable childhood there, for which I could wish.

I cannot explain this well to my children because they have no idea what golden age I grew up in and this is one of the causes of today's generation gap. You cannot miss what you never experienced yourself. We had a lot more personal and natural freedom than now, and a man was a man, and a woman was a woman and people who were visibly mentally disturbed were carted off by blue car straight to nearby Delta.

Society had clear logical structures and political protagonists, judges and administrators gave confidence. That sounds reactionary, but it was just a fact back then. Millennials then say o according to you so everything used to be better than now, that cannot be right. No not everything was better, but a lot was. There was positive energy in that garden city.

From the age of 4 to 18, I always played outside in all weathers and played football for hours every day with the boys from the neighborhood, some of whom later made it to Feyenoord's 1st team and the Dutch national team up to twenty. Although after years I could play football very well, could do everything with the ball, was lightning fast and had good game insight, I dropped out at 19th because I was not monomaniacal and motivated enough and had a much broader interest.

In football and other top sports, you can only reach the top if you are completely monomaniacal and spend all day with the ball, even in your dreams. If you have put all your energy, time and dedication into football and just do not make it to the top, you become a postman, which, by the way, there is nothing wrong with and that happened to my best friend Gerrie Broere at Feyenoord 1. Wim Rijsbergen got that permanent spot as a forward and he did not.

I chose my sweetheart and studying at 19<sup>e</sup>, and for the rest of my life I had an unbridled interest and curiosity in science, philosophy, history, economics and geopolitics. At 17<sup>e</sup>, I had suddenly seen the light and was a lousy student before that. One day, my brother-in-law Arie had forgotten his briefcase with us and my father and uncle Jan, who were up for a joke, could not take their eyes off it. The temptation became too great and eventually they opened the suitcase.

To their great surprise, it did not contain a Bible, as might have been expected, but all kinds of sex toys with enormous dildos that were impressive for the time, and which any frigid and soured Christian woman would undoubtedly have enjoyed daily. Together with one Joop Wilhelmus, Arie turned out to be one of the first porn bosses of our country, who within a few years thereafter effortlessly raked in millions annually with his sanctimonious, prickly and fat head. Why my stunningly beautiful sister had chosen him I did not understand at the age of seven at the time. Only later in life did I realize how essentially attractive women are often really put together.

Many women are often (unconsciously) after financial gain, security and comfort, and while very handsome men pay a lot of attention to their looks, numerous women do not pay much attention to that at all and looks are of secondary importance to them. So good news for ugly men. It is in many women's genes; you cannot really blame them. I have three daughters and had four sisters, worked with hundreds of women in my career and learnt a lot from them. When women shine, it is an important indication of a healthy society.

Women are the backbone of any society. If women shine, they are in their power and happy. If they are visibly unhappy, mud-fat and unattractive then the whole society is stalling like a biotope. The teetering gender balance in our country has been severely disrupted in recent decades by delusions and a thoroughly wrong type of feminism. I kick at intelligent, independent attractive women, but most hardcore feminist activists do not qualify with those core qualities.

You cannot mock nature with impunity. Women surpass men in everything, including evil. Many men have become too effeminate and soft due to societal pressures, and many women often resemble guys in everything. Their children unconsciously internalize this harmful behavior into "their software". Because I had four older sisters, have three daughters and have had numerous relationships, I pretend to know a little more about this complex matter than the average man. Besides, many extremely beautiful women, like my eldest sister who died early, are attracted to evil and the wrong type of boyfriend like by a magnet.

They want to improve him as a project. If they succeed, then he becomes unattractive in their eyes. Do they fail then he was an incorrigible asshole, and they move on to their next project. This is why nice men so often fish behind the net. Many knock-outs do not find them attractive and good friends are soon seen as brothers. One of the protagonists JR from the old soap opera Dallas was immensely popular with the ladies for a reason, who were glued to the tube with wet tights every day to see what JR was going to do next that was forbidden by law and by God.

His machines went in like a drink in an elder. Power, status and dough hypnotize many women. It was a miscalculation by my eldest sister, because he was as miserly as he was hideous. My sister was given a meagre weekly budget by him every week and she was dead miserable for decades. Not surprisingly, she did not live to an old age. Then again, she was not much better than wrong Arie.

She was an extreme egotist and I still remember as a small child that every week she went to buy countless bunches of flowers around the corner from our house and always left with just as many bunches at my parents', to Westmaas and later to Lage Zwaluwe where she lived, without leaving a single bunch of chrysanthemums for my mother. I am old-fashioned but is there anything wrong with honoring your father and mother?

It seemed to me more than selfishness, sadism covered the charge better, I think. As parents, you can take such good care of your children and expect a lot from their upbringing and sacrifice yourself, but the reality is that the good or the rotten character is present (latent) almost at birth and immutable, no matter what many a psychologist, psychiatrist or other behavioral scientist insistently claims. Besides, it is often 1-way traffic.

I later understood from my parents that some of my sisters were jealous because I got more than them in eyesight, but in doing so, they forgot that I was an offspring and only boy, who grew up in a much more prosperous period of our country than they did, and that my parents were poverty-stricken in their childhood. Many women do not excel in empathy - which many HRM experts do claim as a core quality - and besides, jealousy is one of their seven vices. Unbelievably, I have never been jealous of anyone.

Some people, like plants, are attracted to light, others to darkness and grow towards it or turn away from it - like a Joran van der Sloot - and no mother dear can do anything about it. It is unfortunately a harsh reality, and you can only make it worse by pampering and pampering children too much. Then they often become true ungrateful monsters.

Friends and acquaintances you can pick yourself, family unfortunately not. My mother was a kind of white female Nelson Mandela, a strong mental woman with excellent common sense and highly developed sense of justice, a hard worker who worked in the Zuider hospital in Rotterdam-Zuid in addition to caring for five children. She had hardly attended school, she was streetwise, and I am not exaggerating, she had in later life the intellectual capacities of an average professor, proving once again that the importance of common sense and street wisdom are grossly underestimated in our society.

Nice hear those diplomas and bulls -and my wall is full of them metaphorically speaking- but the virtues of the classical Greeks, being able to think logically and courage are much more important in life. Her analyses and logical arguments were usually impeccable, original, realistic and practically feasible, while in the last year and a half I have heard numerous highly learned gentlemen and ladies, including those outside medical science (on corona, climate management and the proxy war in Ukraine) utter the utmost nonsense without any embarrassment.

Besides, bulls and diplomas have been subject to quality inflation in recent decades that cannot be underestimated. This has been caused by making everyone feel better. So as a society, this is of no use to you. People turned out to be especially good at data manipulation and deliberate incompetence, and then they sat in denial or remained silent as the grave. It is much more powerful to say, sorry I was wrong and in the above-mentioned subjects they were and are wrong. But they feel too big for that.

Recent studies in the US and GB and other countries showed every corona rule to be absolute dickweed. I will not go into further detail here, but if it were not such a serious matter, it would be a modern farce. You cannot make people any angrier than to expose their stupidity and attack their unshakeable self- and worldview. They would rather be fooled, according to the philosopher Nicolo Machiavelli, than admit that they have been duped, and this is an intriguing socio-psychological phenomenon.

In my childhood, managing a family of five children full-time was a unique job and my mother, with whom I had an excellent (spiritual) relationship, told me more than once that the local residents - when she stood at the bus stop early in the morning or late in the morning on her way to the South Hospital - looked at her as if she was a tamer and that stung her greatly.

My mother had nothing to do with unhinged feminists and provocative gay men in their bare asses on a canal boat in Amsterdam until her death in May 2021. She agreed with me that there is a fragile and shaky natural balance between men and women and that smart women realize that a man occasionally wants to be in charge and is angling for compliments and appreciation-just like a horse wants a sugar cube-but that women are usually much smarter and more sophisticated than men.

They can use their informal power and subtle steering knobs more effectively to get their way while leaving men under the delusion that they are the captain of the ship. If you disturb that balance with too radical a feminism influenced by too many wrong hormones or wrong foods, then as a woman you achieve exactly the opposite and society no longer flourishes, Yin and Yang huh.

Of all the countless animal species on earth, 99.9999% are made up of heterosexual males or females, sorry D'66, but that is a fact. My mother threw up on the fashionable transgender-neutral and LGBTQ+ stuff and, except for genuine genetic accidents, thought these people were sick in the head. My mother was conservative and progressive at the same time.

Women were and are the most important pillar and the backbone of any thriving society anywhere in the world and that was true in classical Sparta 2,800 years ago and it is still true today for those who dive a little deeper into this matter. I also drafted a little book about that Sparta. The extremely handsome and intelligent women of Sparta played a crucial role in that society.

Though they were never deployed as soldiers during battle, if in an exceptional case the Spartan warrior had fled, betrayed his comrades or showed cowardice in the heat of battle, on his return to Sparta he was not only humiliated but shortly afterward brutally murdered by those women to set an example to the rest. This is partly why those Spartans were so brave and successful in wars. You had better have a blissful death on the battlefield.

It is only those kinky, perverted and decadent ones who call themselves leftists (but are not, they are at most parlor socialists) figures, often themselves genetic misfits, who do not want to see that deviance is not or should not be the norm. For the last 40 years, what they call the far right has been left-wing and progressive.

The New Left is in fact inspired by aggressive Trotskyism. I have nothing at all against gays, quite the contrary, I owe a lot of fine literature, art and most of my clothing to them and some can sing and act beautifully too and who can have anything against innate orientation, not me that is. It becomes something else when they get into lots of key positions that can affect the natural fragile fabric of society. Any form of violence, physical or verbal against gays I find outrageous and extremely reprehensible.

But fake, manufactured fags I do not appreciate so much. Problematic, provocative, society-disrupting attention-grabbers and militant gays who want to demonstrate their swollen cock and emaciated hairy ass on an Amsterdam gondola give me, too, like my mother, peristaltic movements of my gastrointestinal tract. Always pushing the boundaries and going over them only leads to less tolerance.

I am also disgusted by that group's constant sniping at Putin, because both Kiev and Moscow are teeming with gay bars and generally do them no harm at all, and I saw this with my own eyes when my lover and Russian singer Ruslana took me with her lesbian friend to Andy's bar in the heart of the city center. How much I enjoyed being with her and what a sense of humor she had, daughter of an East German Olympic top athlete and a beautiful mother from Moscow, who was a lot younger than me at the time.

The women in Kiev were among the most attractive, adventurous and intelligent in the world from 2012 to 2019. I come back to that too later in this book, because the mass departure of these women, who were the backbone of that society, is one of the unnamed factors why that society imploded economically and socially after 2014. They kept those often derailed, arthritic beggars and dissolute fellows. Who lay on their nests all day without meaning to and who were always willing or prone to corruption in check, and those women sparkled and gave that society energy, creativity and face.

Even well before Russia's military intervention in February 2022, 10 million young and educated people left Ukraine for good and left for Russia, the EU, the US and Canada. You do not hear anyone about that. Then, after the military conflict erupted, a real exodus took place so that only eighteen million people now live in Ukraine, compared to the forty-three million there were in 2010 when I first visited that country.

Virtually everything that has been reported about that country in our mainstream media for 3 years by our MSM is blatantly false and lied about, not based on facts and it is either total incompetence on the part of those journalists or it is malicious intent to do their bit in that way. It seems like the devil is playing with it. The kleptocrat-comedian Zelenskyyyyyy still takes those forty-three million inhabitants as the basis for applying for the billion-dollar aid. We in the West have for years been paying all the salaries of their civil service and pensioners, who get €100 a month if they are lucky.

The bulk of the aid money disappears into the deep pockets of the down to the bone corrupt members of the quasi-Nazi regime and believe me well I have lived there for years, the media and you neither Jasper van Dijk of the SP know what you are talking about. Where is it written that a Jew cannot have Nazi connections.

The top German Zionists, two top bankers from Berlin, maintained intensive contacts with top Nazis before 1940 and financed Hitler and thus contributed to helping him in the saddle so that he could help populate the newly formed state of Israel. As the Russian writer Tolstoi said, history is incredibly beautiful, if true. Napoleon said the winners write the history books and well that is undoubtedly true. Authentic history can be compared to the ten successive layers of soil one has to dig into. Our school history books, and our media often do not get beyond the first two layers, are full of propaganda. Dig a little deeper and the reality turns out to be completely different.

The proxy war in Ukraine has nothing, but really nothing to do with democracy or freedom, nor with expansionism of Russia, but everything to do with power greed and greed of small group of key players in the West, especially the Neocons in the US and GB. Ukraine is not a democracy at all, never was either, and after 2014 eliminated all opposition, including unwelcome media after 2019, and is an evil dictatorship of pocket-busting oligarchs, who are overthrowing their own people for their own financial gain.

That country will not become a member of the EU or NATO and if we do push our way at all costs, we will not survive because of a 3<sup>e</sup> world war. What is striking is how many people in the West were fans of Ukraine and raised yellow, blue flags even though they knew nothing about that country and could not even point out that country on the map when I first got there in 2010.

Everything the mainstream media claims is often 180 degrees the opposite and many in our country uncritically follow this propagandistic nonsense, which just goes to show how easily the masses are manipulated and brainwashed. Joseph Goebbels had already realized this unerringly in the 1930s and had in turn learned it from American psychologist Edward Bernays, Sigmund Freud's brother-in-law.

The tricks used by our MSM have been around for at least one hundred years, but over 2,000 years, but many people do not recognize them as deceptions. For instance, Julius Caesar was accused by the Egyptians of having the library of Alexandria, of inestimable cultural value deliberately set on fire, which was a gross disgrace to him in the eyes of people in the classical world.

However, a Roman Galleon caught fire, and that fire spread to an administration office for commerce, say a kind of chamber of commerce and so this story is completely unexpected. Propaganda is one of the weapons at the time of war and according to von Clausewitz, war is nothing but diplomacy by other means. Diplomacy is now completely absent, and the Netherlands was known precisely for that in the last century and Max van der Stoep was respected worldwide, just as Sergei Lavrov is becoming so now.

Russia was said to be doing a lot of propaganda according to our MSM, but all Russian media were immediately taken in by that witch von der Leyen. What a nasty and overambitious woman that is. Overambitious and incompetent people are the most dangerous kind of politician. After failing in everything as a minister in Germany, she was jettisoned by Merkel and parachuted in as president of the European and has been leaving a trail of destruction there ever since, already fancying herself as president of the United States of Europe.
