These pages were written with care and with scars. Please don't copy or repost large sections without asking. If you want to quote short passages for review, study, or discussion, you are welcome, please include my name and the book title. If you work with refugees, students, book clubs, or human-rights groups and want to share a chapter or run a reading, write to me, I usually grant permission for non-commercial, educational use.

Acknowledgments

This book was carried on many shoulders before it reached these pages. To everyone who gave me bread when I was hungry, a corner of a room when I was cold, and a listening ear when the night felt too long thank you. Your kindness stitched my journey together.

And also My deepest thanks go to Rafay Baloch and Islam Murad my dearest friends, my brothers. You stood by me through every stage of this journey and helped me shape these stories into words To my mother, whose prayers crossed borders faster than my feet ever could every page is a thank you letter to your patience and love. To the friends I met on the road Afghans, Syrians, Kurds, Baloch, Eritreans, Sudanese who shared water, maps, and silence. Some of you made it, some of you didn't I carry all your names in my heart, even when I cannot print them here.

Finally, to the city that let me breathe again Amsterdam and to everyone who taught me that freedom is not a door you walk through once, but a practice, learned slowly, together.
